W. German White Paper Denies Majority Of Germans Are Anti-Jewish

The West German Government issued a White Paper that asserted "there is no evidence that large parts of the population harbor anti-Semitic feelings." This was a major conclusion of an investigation conducted by the Ministry of the Interior on the year-end outbreak of anti-Semitic vandalism in West Germany, says the New York Times. The reaction to the outbreak showed that the "overwhelming majority of the German people condemn anti-Semitism and are ready to take defensive action," the White Paper said.

It reported that 685 incidents took place between Christmas Day, when the Cologne synagogue was desecrated with slogans and swastikas, and January 28. Of these 215 were listed as "minor infantile smearings" and did not figure in the Ministry's analysis.

In all, 234 persons were arrested and the analysis attributed political motives to almost one-third of them. Twenty-four per cent of those arrested and investigated acted out of "subconscious Nazi motives," according to the report, and eight per cent were said to have been inspired by extreme Right or Left-wing beliefs.

In a joint statement after publication of the White Paper the Social Democratic party and the Trade Union Federation said: "The danger in West Germany today lies not so much in forces that are aggressively disposed toward democracy but more in the fact that too many people have too few deep-rooted feelings for democracy."

The statement added that Germans must oppose the tendency "to cover the horrors of the past with a cloak of silence" and must do everything possible to inform youth about the Nazi period. The White paper said no evidence had been uncovered to show that the outbreak in West Germany was organized or centrally directed, says the New York Times. However, both the Communists and the extreme Right-wing German Reich's party were implicated.

The ideology of the German Reich's party probably contributed to some of the acts, the report said, and the question of Communist direction "can only be appropriately handled against the Federal Republic."

Once the incidents began, the Communists exerted "active influence" for the purpose of propaganda exploitation, the White Paper said. The high number of cases — 123 — in West Berlin, "despite the widely known anti-Nazi attitude of the people" of the city, was cited as one indication of the Communists' involvement.

Besides, the White Paper said, members of the Communist youth organization were caught smearing swastikas and pasting up anti-Semitic posters and agents of the East German secret police were discovered in West Berlin and West German Right-wing political organizations.

Of the two-thirds of the incidents without political meaning the investigation found that 48 per cent were the work of hooligans or intoxicated persons; 16 per cent of children under 14; and 5 per cent of persons mentally ill, says the New York Times. Sentences so far imposed by the courts ranged from fines and special education measures for young people to twenty-two months' imprisonment for one man.

In New York Dr. Joachim Prinz, president of the American Jewish Congress, said that "international direction" lies behind the recent outbreak of anti-Semitic vandalism in Europe and in the United States and he named Malmo, Sweden, and Cairo as two head-quarters that are in contact with each other.

Dr. Prinz, rabbi of Temple Emanu El Abraham, Newark, N. J., made his statement at the conference of the Brooklyn Council of Pioneer Women, the Women's Labor Zionist organization, in the Astor Hotel. More than 1,000 members heard Dr. Prinz, who was a German rabbi until he was expelled by the Nazis in 1937.

Questioned by the New York Herald Tribune after his speech, Dr. Prinz said that his information about the international character of the anti-Semitic gatherings in Malmo and Cairo had originally come from the German-language newspaper "Aufbau" (Reconstruction), published in New York.

Dr. Prinz recently returned from Germany, where he was received by Chancellor Konrad Adenauer. He told his audience that "much of the anti-Semitic literature" in the Federal Germany Republic comes from the United

Hospital Plans "Mother Bank" To Aid Disturbed Babies

Mount Sinai Hospital in New York is trying to develop a "mother bank" of volunteers who would act as stand-in mothers for emotionally disturbed infants. The stand-in mothers would spend several hours daily with the infants, holding, caressing and playing with them until their true mothers were physically or psychologically able to give the babies the necessary attention and affection.

The need for such a plan was pointed up by the results of a case study by three physicians at Mount Sinai, says the New York Times. It was reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association. The doctors wrote of an eight-month-old boy who was admitted to the hospital last year. He suffered from malnutrition, the inability to keep food down, and a two-and-a-quarter-pound loss of weight in two months prior to admission.

Attempts to discover some physiological cause for the infants' condition failed, the doctors wrote. The baby continued to lose weight, and it was decided to obtain a psychiatric diagnosis of his trouble. A tentative study showed that the baby suffered from infantile anxiety neurosis and depression and reacted to this by voluntarily regurgitating food, the physicians wrote.

Psychiatric examination of the mother revealed the cause of the infant's depression. She had become depressed over her third, and unwanted, pregnancy to the point where she was psychologically unable to show the affection that the infant needed, the physicians found. Instead of holding her baby close and caressing him, she would simply prop him up in bed, preoccupied with her own depression.

The Mount Sinai physicians tried to help the infant by having pediatric nurses give him more attention. A woman volunteer was enlisted to spend a few hours daily with the infant. Still, the child declined. It was not until a full-time special nurse was engaged to spend eight hours daily with the infant that he began to respond, the physicians reported.

During his recovery, his mother was given psychiatric care, and she gradually learned how to assume her properly affectionate role with the infant. This was found to improve her condition as well, according to the report.

Dr. Robert Shaw, who is in charge of the child psychiatric ward of the psychiatric service at Mount Sinai, is working to establish the "mother bank." He said that both the infant and his mother were now doing nicely, an example of what such a program could achieve. He said the idea for the "mother bank" at Mount Sinai Hospital was that of Dr. Abram Blau, who is in charge of the

Professors Urge Funds For Human Relations Research

A group of social scientists from Harvard, Columbia, and Cornell Universities called on the U.S. Government to "earmark large-scale funds" for basic research in human relations. The plea, citing the recent spate of religious vandalism, was made by Dr. Gordon W. Allport, head of the Psychology Department of Harvard; Dr. Otto Klineberg, Professor of Psychology, of Columbia; and Dr. Robin M. Williams Jr., Professor of Sociology, of Cornell.

Their views were expressed at a press conference in New York at the American Jewish Committee's new Institute of Human Relations, 165 East Fifty-sixth Street. The committee held seminars on prejudice, says the New York Times. At the same time, Dr. John Slawson, executive vice president of the committee, noted the importance of coordinating the efforts of private agencies, secular and religious groups, and educators and scientists to broaden "the frontiers of human relations."

Dr. Slawson, suggested that large foundations allocate greater portions of their vast funds for intergroup-relations research." Although Dr. Allport supported the idea of Government aid for human-relations programs, he questioned whether Government would be willing to [illegible] such allocations. He added, however, that it might be easier to get allocations for overseas research.

Dr. Klineberg, a former Montrealer, said the Government was spending large sums on research in the natural sciences, but he emphasized that the problem of human relations "both at home and abroad requires immediate Government attention." Dr. Williams called for Federal, state, and city support to cope with the problems of prejudice.

Dr. Slawson held that private agencies and universities "should be doing more than they are now in dealing with the problems of human relations." He cited as an example his agency's five-volume "Studies in Prejudice," a work

Two Boys, Girl, Among 55,000, Rank Highest In N.Y. State Regents Scholarship Tests

The highest score among the approximately 55,000 candidates in 1,200 secondary schools of New York State, in the Regents Scholarship tests, was 279 out of a possible 300. This was achieved by two students: Stephen R. Chinn, aged seventeen years, who attends Middletown High School and resides at 4 Wilkin Avenue in Middletown; and Norman J. Levitt, sixteen, who attends the Bronx High School of Science and resides at 1175 Walton Avenue in the Bronx.

The highest score among the girl candidates was 271 and was achieved by Naomi Fuchs, aged fifteen, who attends Yeshiva University High School for Girls and resides at 66 South Ninth Street in Brooklyn. In many ways she is like the two boys, says the New York Times. She is Jewish, is an only child, comes from a middle-income home, reads widely, and takes part in school sports and other extra-curricular activities. Her first academic interests are in mathematics and technology. But in one respect she differs sharply from the boys. While they are cool to religion, she is devoted.

Mathematics and technology, the twin horses of scientific progress, have laid first claim to the affections of these two of the brightest boys in the state of New York. Their preferred leisure-time activity is listening to classical music. Both read widely but in no remarkable quantity. They participate moderately in sports and are leaders in extra-curricular activities at school.

Although both professed an interest in abstract ideas, only Norman Levitt seemed inclined to sustain more than a momentary discussion of them. We saw interviewed in his living-room with his mother, Molly, and his father, Saul F. Levitt.

Norman is heading for a lifetime of teaching and research in "math or physics." The words came fast. They sounded a bit like "metaphysics." "Unh, unh. Not these days," he said. "It's obsolescent now." He has lately been reading Sigmund Freud's "General Introduction to Psychoanalysis," "The Autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini," and an "Introduction to Symbolic Logic and its Applications" by Rudolf Carnap.

"Norman is a writer," his mother offered. "He won the poetry contest." "He was valedictorian of his junior high school class," Mr. Levitt said. "Please don't kibbitz," Norman suggested. He found his poetry in a file folder. His mother named her favorite. "It's pure cliché," the author said with a wave of the hand.

Norman acknowledged that he was a semi-finalist in half dozen scholarship competitions, a finalist in two, and president or chairman of five or six junior erudite societies. He is editor of The Math Bulletin, a scholarly annual published at school, and captain of the math team, which plays in the wholly cerebral Interscholastic Mathematics League.

He plays basketball, tennis, and stickball ("If you live in the Bronx you play stickball"), stands in line for rush seats at the opera; and likes to see the basketball and hockey games at Madison Square Garden improved by fights, says the New York Times. Norman does not lead a rigidly disciplined academic life, often pushes his homework off to a late hour and then does it with both hi-fi and the television blaring.

Unlike Norman, Stephen Chinn has known the pang that attends scoring less than 90 per cent in an academic subject. He took a summer course at Cornell University last summer and scored an 89 in chemistry. Otherwise he hits in the 90's in golf and schoolwork.

Stephen also likes tennis and swimming, chess, bridge, and science fiction. He has read through the fifty-volume science fiction shelf at the Thrall Library. He plays the piano. His immediate goal is to study electrical engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, then go on to graduate work and perhaps to research in solid state electronics.

Stephen's father, George, describes him as "introspective." The Reunion Through A Chance Clue

BY ARARON FLORENCE, OF THE WEIZMANN OF SCIENCE, AT REHOVOTH, ISRAEL

A dramatic reunion between two cousins, separated for over twenty years as a result of the Nazi holocaust in Europe, took place recently in a laboratory at the Weizmann Institute of Science in Israel. The circumstances leading up to the joyful meeting follow the familiar pattern of "discovery" of missing relatives. At first all hope is given up of ever finding any one alive after the German obliteration of entire Jewish communities in the Second World War. Then a chance clue enables the seeker to track down a close family relative.

That is what happened to Mrs. Irene Inger, now of New York, who had come to Israel on her first visit. A relative living there told her that her cousin, Fischel, had been saved from Germany and was working in Israel as a scientist. Mrs. Inger's last memory of him was as a four-year-old tot who remained with his parents in Germany, when she migrated to the United States in 1938. One morning Mrs. Inger came to the offices of the Weizmann Institute, and in a tearful voice told one of the employees: "My cousin Fischel is alive and working at this Institute. Please help me to find him.

The scientist, Dr. Feodor (Fischel) Scheinmann, was located in the organic chemistry department where he is a staff member. A telephone call brought him and his cousin together for the first time in 21 years. She had not known he was alive. After 1939, when the war broke out in Europe, she never heard from the family again and was certain they had perished. Dr. Scheinmann's parents had, indeed, been killed in Nazi death camps but he was one of the fortunate few who escaped and survived. Nine days before the war began, when it became evident that only a few could get out, the older people sacrificed their own chances for their young.

His mother put the five-year-old boy, and a tag with his name, aboard a train from Berlin to Hamburg, and from there he went by steamer to England. He was adopted by a childless Manchester family named Abrahams and grew up as their son. He studied chemistry at the Royal Technical College in Salford, Lancashire, in the Midlands of England, and took his Ph.D. degree from the University of London. From 1955 to 1956 he was in the United States on a Fulbright fellowship, serving as a graduate teaching assistant at Oberlin College in Ohio. In 1958 he went to Israel to undertake research in organic chemistry at the Technion in Haifa on a post-doctoral fellowship.

There he met a young girl student who had escaped from Hungary during the 1956 revolt. In 1959 they married. Later both Feodor and Ruth Scheinmann went to the Weizmann Institute of Science to join the staff. She is in the department of isotope research and he occupies the laboratory in the Daniel Sieff Research Institute building which was used by the late Dr. Chaim Weizmann from 1934 onwards.

Lucky Ones Die

BY THELMA DICKMAN, IN THE CANADIAN HIGHWAY SAFETY COUNCIL BULLETIN

Jimmy Nichols is a quiet 17-year-old, well-mannered and hard-working. He wants to be a teacher.

One night when he was a baby, his parents, George and Anna Nichols, were walking home from a late movie.

George was a housepainter; Anna, a part-time cleaning woman.

The couple lived with George's parents in a neatly crowded sugar cube of a house. Anna looked forward to the day when she could stop cleaning other people's floors and start polishing her own.

Their saving account was growing slowly, but she and George were young and healthy. Soon they'd have their own home, and may be more children.

They were walking arm-in-arm across a street when the car hit them. It swept them off the road and dumped them in the gutter like bundles of old clothing.

The weeks that followed were frightening. George was in the hospital for days, Anna for a month. Hospital bills piled up. Their bank account shriveled. The old grandparents were close to exhaustion, from the shock of the accident and coping with a baby all day.

When $10,000 was offered as an out of court settlement the Nichols' accepted. It seemed like all the money in the world.

"Surely," they reasoned, "there's no need to see a lawyer. With all this money we can pay the hospital bills, buy our house and live happily."

That was 17 years ago.

Today George and Anna Nichols are in their early 60's.

Since the accident George has worked less than a year. He is a hopeless alcoholic, nervous and excitable, unable to make up his mind about the smallest detail of daily life. His family has been on and off relief for years. George doesn't make any more attempts to work; he sits in a chair and stares silently out the window.

Anna Nichols had her lip split like a ripe pumpkin when her mouth hit the cement curb. It doesn't hurt her any more to speak — but it will always be painful to hear her.

She still lives with George's parents, still cleans other people's floors. It takes her longer now. When her broken hip healed it left her permanently lame.

Jimmy Nichols, their son, couldn't finish high school. He works in a gas station to help support his parents. He knows he isn't going to make it to teachers' college.

This story isn't unusual, insurance company files bulge with cases just like it. So tragic are some of the stories that agents wear armor around their hearts to guard against sentiment.

"The lucky ones die," they say when they talk about people like George and Anna.

TWO BOYS, GIRL

boy's manner is unassertive but quietly assured. He is president of the Physics Club and of the school's branch of the National Honor Society. He finds that intellect gives him a reputation equal to those of the leading football players, but only because he is first. Stephen, whose own hero is Albert Einstein, says that other cranial luminaries are less revered than holders of multiple varsity M's.

Learning is the core of life for Naomi Fuchs, the 15-year-old Brooklyn youngster who led the girls in the Regents scholarship tests, says the New York Times, lives at 66 South Ninth Street; is a senior at Yeshiva University High School for Girls; and scored 271 out of a possible 300 in the state examination.

At Yeshiva University High School, Naomi Fuchs takes English, the Talmud, American history, economics, Hebrew language and literature, physics, calculus, a study of the prophets and elements of Judaism. Her day begins at 6:30, when she awakens without an alarm, and ends at 10 p.m. following two hours of homework. She rides the Nostrand Avenue bus to school, arriving at 9 a.m. and leaving at 5 p.m. or later. She uses the forty minutes each way for required reading.

After college, she wants to visit Israel, where she may some day settle. Later Naomi thinks she will look for work "programing digital computers — interpreting facts and translating them into a language a machine can understand." She reads newpaper editorials, biographies, and fiction, especially the novels of James Hilton. Most of the girls at school use cosmetics but Miss Fuchs has made up her mind not to make up her face.

The most important thing in life is learning, she said. "Learning things!" "Learning everything," she replied. "Next comes religion, practicing and believing it." She described her religion as "an everyday thing, like part of me. It doesn't just come in spurts once in a while."

The only subject Naomi has ever got a B in are conduct and penmanship. "In music I once got a 75," she said, "but that was because the teacher didn't like me."

Naomi Fuchs is the daughter of Gertrude and Edward Isaac Fuchs. Her father is a social worker for the city of New York, says the New York Times. After finishing high school, she hopes to attend Stern College for Women, one of the schools of Yeshiva University at Lexington Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street.

PROFESSORS URGE FUNDS

that has been distributed to colleges and universities throughout the U.S., says the New York Times. He noted that agencies like his own were "on the firing line" in dealing with prejudice and he called on universities and educators "to back us up with basic research which we can apply in the field."

On religious vandalism, the three social scientists "agreed emphatically" on the importance of understanding "through depth interviews and analysis" the individuals apprehended by the police.

MAZEL TOV

made from sweet Concord grapes by the most famous name in Canadian winemaking!

Years of planning It took more than three years, after the decision was taken to introduce a kosher wine, before the first beautiful decanter of "Mazel Tov" was placed on the market. The strict details of Kashruth had to be arranged with the rabbis, and elaborate testing and research undertaken. From all this came "Mazel Tov"—a wine we are proud to offer from coast to coast in Canada.

Delicious "heimish" flavour This sweet rich wine in its beautiful decanter bottle recaptures the taste you used to know. It is the wine you sipped at the Pesach seders, the wine beside the candles at the Sabbath meal, the wine you made Kiddush with at Yom Tov, and the wine with which you toasted "L'chayim" at every simcha. "Mazel Tov" is a wine you'll "remember" with pleasure as you drink it. It's a wine that says "Mazel Tov" on your lips, as in the glass.

Available now! In Quebec, "Mazel Tov" is on sale at most QLC stores. In Ontario, "Mazel Tov" is available at LCBO stores, and at any of Bright's retail wine stores.

In the Toronto metropolitan area, for free delivery of three bottles or more, phone LE 4-7557.

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

MILLER-BERNSTEIN

The marriage of Miss Joyce Bernstein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hyman Bernstein, 1662 Lajoie Avenue, to Louis Miller, son of Abraham Miller, 4507 Melrose Avenue, and the late Mrs. A. Miller, took place at Shaare Zion Synagogue, on Sunday, February 21, at six o'clock. Rabbi Maurice Cohen officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was attired in a gown of white peau de soie, which was embroidered with Alencon lace, seed-pearl-beads and sequins ending in a chapel train. Her shoulder-length veil of tulle illusion was held by a crown of Alencon lace and seed-pearl-beads; and she carried a prayer book with orchids and stephanotis. Miss Pearl Bronstein, as maid of honour for her cousin, wore a gown of pale blue satin; and carried a cascade of Sweetheart roses. Seymour Miller, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Fred Bernstein, Leon Bronstein, Michael Cape, David Grill, Arnold Anscel, Jerry Hirsh, Jerry Rosen, Morton Hopkins, Allen Korzenstone, and Carl Baylin, of Ottawa, Ont. White gladioli, tied with clusters of pink ribbon, decorated the Synagogue and hall. Mrs. Bernstein, mother of the bride, was gowned in blue lace, with satin trimmings; and a matching hat. Mrs. Morton Hopkins, sister of the groom, wore a pale blue, beaded, ribbon lace gown set over peau de sole and chiffon; with a hat of the same material. Their corsages were of orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Louis Miller spent their wedding trip at the Nevele Country Club, in Ellenville, N.Y., the bride going away in a black knit dress.

GOLDSTEIN-BLACK

The marriage of Miss Sema Black, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Black, 7490 Stuart Avenue, to Henry J. Goldstein, son of Mrs. Clara Anhalt, 1940 Seventy-Fifth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., and the late Carol Goldstein, took place at the Beth Aaron Synagogue, on Sunday, September 27, at half-past six o'clock. Rabbi Sydney Shoham officiated, assisted by Reverend Marcu Indik. The bride, given in marriage by her parents, was gowned in white peau de faille. It was fashioned with a fitted bodice of Guipure lace, re-embroidered with seed pearl beads, and made with a portrait neckline and short sleeves; and a pleated skirt, finishing in a cathedral train. Her fingertip veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a tiara of seed pearl beads and rhinestones, and she carried a prayer book, adorned with white orchids and stephanotis. Miss Sylvia Black, sister of the bride, was maid of honour, wearing a ballerina-length gown of beige chiffon, with matching accessories; a beige feather hat, and a cascade of pale yellow and orange-coloured Tea roses. Harriet, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Essner; and Rhonda, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Leibovitch, nieces of the bride, were flower girls, dressed alike in pale yellow organdy frocks; and had nosegays of yellow and bronze-coloured baby roses. Herbert Lyon Zanger was best man. The ushers were: Brahm E. Greenblatt, Murray Karpman, Martin Address, Mac Kaplan, Fred Essner, and Sherman C. Satler. Alan Howard Leibovitch, nephew of the bride, was page boy. Yellow and bronze-coloured flowers, arranged with apple blossoms and greenery, decorated the Synagogue and hall. Mrs. Morris Black, mother of the bride, was in a beige lace gown, made with a V-neckline, and a tiered skirt of matching lace; with beige accessories, and a beige feathered hat. Mrs. Clara Anhalt, mother of the groom, wore a white lace gown, over champagne-coloured peau de soie, styled with a sweetheart neckline; and had matching beige accessories, and a beige feathered hat. Each had a corsage of gold-tinted orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Goldstein spent their wedding trip at the Nevele Country Club, in Ellenville, N. Y., the bride travelling in a black cashmere suit, trimmed with a black mink collar, with pale red accessories; and a white orchid corsage. They have taken up residence in Brooklyn, N. Y. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rosu, of Chibougamau, Que., uncle and aunt of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. B. Hanser and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Goldman, of Teaneck, N. J., cousins of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. I. Messer, of Bronx, N. Y.; Mrs. Esther Fishman, Mr. and Mrs. M. Address, Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Satler, and Mr. and Mrs. D. Fishman, all of Chicago, Ill., cousins of the bride.

Labor Zionist Leader Rebukes Z.O.A., Hadassah Heads

Strong criticism of statements recently made by the heads of ZOA and Hadassah was voiced in New York by Pinchas Cruso, president of the Labor Zionist Organization of America, at a meeting of its Central Committee. Abraham Redelheim, ZOA president, has been quoted in the press as having said that "the deterioration in the degree of American public support for Israel's just claims coupled with the growing pro-Arab position of the State Department and U.S. policies of appeasement of Nasser seems to be in direct ratio with the extent the organized Zionist movement has been downgraded by Israel's leaders."

Mr. Cruso declared that this was "an ill-considered and most regrettable statement. No matter what differences of opinion we may have with any of the Israel leaders with regards to personal statements some of them occasionally make about the Zionist movement in general and the American Zionist movement in particular," Mr. Cruso said, "no responsible American Zionist leader has any justification for linking this with the current policies of the State Department in the Near East. Mr. Redelheim's attempt to do so may only lead to divert our attention away from the political leaders in Washington who are virtually responsible for these policies and into a sterile internecine conflict based upon false implications within the Zionist Movement," Mr. Cruso warned.

The ZOA head also rejected the statement recently made by Dr. Miriam K. Freund, president of Hadassah, that there is no Jewish vote in the United States.

"In the first place," Mr. Cruso said, "this statement runs contrary to what most political analysts and those who are directly related to political action in America tell us. By denying it, there may be created the wrong impression that we are trying to hide something. Secondly, such apologetics are absolutely unnecessary," Mr. Cruso went on. "America is not an abstraction but the embodiment of living, vital individuals and groups of divers interests, varying approaches and many different evaluations as to what is in the national interest. This is what makes America the greatest democracy in the world. The free play of the various factors in our citizenry enriches our American democracy.

"No one questions our right to think and act as Jews in America when we feel that our interests as Jews are affected," Mr. Cruso asserted. "Certainly President Eisenhower, in the statement at his press conference which provoked Dr. Freund's declaration, did not for one moment question that right. Why then must the leader of an important Zionist organization put this under a question mark?"

Mr. Cruso concluded his remarks with a strong call to the whole Zionist leadership in America to unite its forces and to seek the ways to strengthen the Zionist movement in this country in general, and more particularly for the common struggle in which he feels the movement must engage against the alarming tendencies towards appeasing the Arabs, and especially President Nasser of the UAR, which, he asserted, are becoming more manifest on the policy-making levels of our Government.

THE CULTURAL PREDICAMENT OF SOVIET JEWRY

Folkshtimme, when it was available in the Soviet Union, used to be read widely and avidly. Even now, when its distribution is no longer permitted, some copies are coming in and are being passed from hand to hand. And I myself have seen readers sitting in the Lenin Library's periodical division, busily perusing Yiddish Communist newspapers from New York, Paris, Tel Aviv. How do you account for that?"

"I must confess," he answered, "that I, too, often visit the Lenin Library for the same purpose. Yet, believe me, I do so not out of love for Yiddish, but merely because I am starved for some news of Jewish life abroad. In these foreign Communist papers — the only Jewish periodicals available in our blessed country — I can sometimes find scattered bits of information. It is biased and distorted, to be sure, but it is there, and I have learned the art of reading between the lines. It is still better than nothing.

"And if you want tangible proof that it is not sheer love for das Yiddishe vort which inspires me and the others, just take a look at the copies of the Birobidjan Shtern in the same library; nobody even touches that paper, though it is published in Yiddish. Why? Because there is nothing of specific Jewish interest in it; it is just another Communist paper. And that will be the fate of any future Yiddish periodical, if any ever manage to get published. Nobody is going to read a newspaper only because it happens to be in Yiddish. Please convey to our brothers abroad that they should stop deploring the passing of the Yiddish press in Soviet Russia and clamoring for its revival. They simply don't know what they are talking about."

Thus my friend disposed of Yiddish schools and newspapers. It was now my turn to inquire about the prospects for a revival of the Yiddish theater.

"That depends on what you mean by Yiddish theater," he responded. "If you have in mind a permanent full-fledged repertory company, the answer is — no. There are simply no Yiddish actors capable of filling all the roles. Prewar Yiddish actors and actresses have by now grown old and fat. None of them could play a young lead. I myself work with a local amateur Yiddish 'art group' comprising about thirty members. Our program includes Yiddish songs, recitations, fragments from plays, puppet shows, folk dances. I am 49 — and I am the youngest of the troupe! Some actors have already reached the age of retirement (over 60) and are beneficiaries of state pensions; they are allowed to work only two months per year. How can you build a permanent professional theatrical company on such a foundation?

"What is possible, and what is actually in existence and enjoying considerable popularity, are the so-called 'artistic ensembles' which offer the public concerts and recitals in Yiddish. There are ensembles, as far as I know, in Leningrad, Riga, Tashkent, Vilna and they perform all over the Soviet Union, attracting big and enthusiastic audiences. I read in the Communist Naie Presse of Paris, that the Soviet Vice Minister of Culture, Danilov, told a delegation of the Jewish Section of the French Communist Party last year that in the year 1957 alone, some 3,000 shows and concerts were performed in Yiddish throughout the country and were attended by nearly 3,000,000 people. This, of course, is ridiculous nonsense. But the number of such performances is indeed considerable, and so is the number of Jews who enjoyed them.

"My own Leningrad "art group" is financed by the Union of Municipal Employees, in which Jews are strongly represented, and which is very active in this field. To sing Yiddish songs or recite fragments from Sholom Aleichem one doesn't have to be young and slim; folk dances do demand young performers, but they require no knowledge of Yiddish. Such a combination is realistic and it works.

"You may well ask why Jews still come in the thousands to these performances. The answer is simple. The bulk of the audiences consists of elderly people in their sixties, who harbor a sentiment for the folk songs of their youth, who can still enjoy a piece of Sholom Aleichem. Young people are a small minority. They come partly out of curiosity, partly because their parents bring them. According to my own observations and to the evidence of friends who attended the concerts in other urban centers, the younger members of the audience rarely understand what is being sung or recited. The parents have to translate the Yiddish lines into Russian for their children. All this undoubtedly helps keep alive some spark of Jewish consciousness. But it does not change the overall picture. Yiddish as a medium of culture in the Soviet Jewish community is swiftly dying out."

"Would Yiddish books, if and when their publication would be resumed by state publishing houses, respond to a genuine, deep-seated need of Soviet Jewry? Would they enjoy wide circulation?" I then asked.

"I cannot offer any intelligent guess as to the existence of a truly large circle of readers for literature in Yiddish," he replied. "That the younger generation would not buy Yiddish books seems axiomatic; they simply don't know the language. How many of the older people would buy and read a modern Yiddish novel or poem, I really don't know. But there is a very simple way of finding out; publish a few books and see what their circulation will be."

"But isn't it a fact," I reminded him, "that when a volume of Sholom Aleichem was recently published in the original, it was sold out within a few days, and people stood in long lines to acquire it? I strongly suspect that you yourself were there, too."

"Your suspicion is quite correct: I was. But I want you to understand the real background of the almost frantic hunt for this particular book. Imagine that you live in a country where caviar has for many years been forbidden. You personally may not care too much for caviar; at least you have lived all these caviar-less years without hungering for it. But all of a sudden you hear that caviar is available in very limited quantities and, most probably, only in this single instance. Wouldn't you rush to buy a tin, irrespective of whether you really want and need it, just out of curiosity, or as a protest against the government restriction? But should caviar become freely available, your urge might very well disappear. However, all this is mere speculation. It would be worthwhile to make an experiment — and watch the results."

Many cases of suffocation of infants have been ascribed to mechanical causes such as a pillow or bedclothes lying over the child's face. Medical authorities have found that respiratory diseases, often unsuspected, are more frequently the cause of death.

Israel Is Self-Confident, Never Had It So Good

Israel today is sleek, secure and self-confident. The mood of her people contrasts dramatically with the moods they evidenced when they were dreaming secretly of independence during World War II or fighting with limitless hopes for the birth of a state in 1948.

In the 1951-53 period they faced the realities of statehood and disillusionment. They tangled with their own bureaucracy. The Treasury lurched from crisis to crisis, writes Dana Adams Schmidt in the New York Times. Immigrants from the East quarrelled with immigrants from the West; newcomers quarreled with old residents. Goods were rationed and black-marketing was rife. It was a raw state of affairs.

Today Israel is, by comparison, relaxed and comfortable. Shops are full of goods and customers, and a sizable proportion of the goods are made in Israel. Instead of bargaining on street corners for cans of powdered coffee, people lounge in espresso shops.

In 1953 there was a ten-year plan to make Israel self-supporting, and nobody believed in it. Only 15 per cent of the nation's imports was then balanced by exports. This year there is another ten-year plan aimed at the goal of self-sufficiency, and it makes sense. The volume of exports is edging up toward 60 per cent of the import total, and rising fast.

An official of the Premier's office seems a little embarrassed to be told that Israel looks comfortable. "We still have pioneers," he observes, telling of young people in the frontier settlements, by the Dead Sea and in the Negev. The chief difference between then and now is that now most of the settlers get a good night's sleep.

On most of the borders Arab infiltration has been a thing of the past since the Sinai campaign of 1956. The Gaza and Sinai borders are patrolled by members of the United Nations Emergency Force, says the New York Times. On the Jordanian border the Arab authorities, determined to avoid trouble, have clamped down on illegal crossings. The Lebanese have never been troublesome.

Only on the Syrian border, especially along the Sea of Galilee, is there sporadic shooting. The trouble there could develop into a new crisis if the Arab states go through with their threat to divert water from tributaries of the Jordan River to prevent Israel from channeling it to the Negev.

The Israelis' sense of having "arrived" is still mixed with wonder at their accomplishments. "What do you think of all the new buildings?" they ask. "Hasn't everything changed?" "Did you see the new hotel? But it's not half as good as the one in Herzlia. You must go to the university. Really, it's beautiful. And all the Government buildings in Jerusalem — you would never believe it. Of course, the real change is in the Negev. You won't recognize Beersheba." And so it goes.

In 1951 this correspondent drove south to Elath in a truck over rocky tracks. The group arrived in the Gulf of Aqaba port, and exhausted, thirsty, to find that the water supply had failed. Now Elath is a thriving community with a comfortable hotel from which people go skin-diving. There is also a pipeline through which oil is pumped across the Negev to railroad tank cars waiting at Beersheba.

In 1953 the highways of Israel were still lined with immigrants' transit camps called "maabaroth," tawdry places of tin and canvas. Now a visitor has to look for such dwellings. Most immigrants have moved to little concrete houses in agricultural settlements or to the endless rows of white apartment houses, with a little balcony for each apartment, seemingly filled with laundry and children.

Then Israel seemed isolated. Her land frontiers with the Arab lands were closed and contacts with her overseas neighbors were more an idea than reality, says the New York Times. Now Israel has thriving trade with East and West Africa. Young Africans, Indians and Burmese mingle with Israelis at the university. Technicians are going out to assist the newly independent Africans, who find in Israel a welcome alternative to the great powers of East and West.

Arthur Lourie, Israel's Ambassador to the U.S. and chairman of its delegation to the United Nations, said in New York that Israel was involved in a struggle for economic survival in the face of hostile neighbors that was every bit as crucial as the "heroic" period of the state's establishment, says the New York Herald Tribune. Mr. Lourie told 20,000 persons assembled at Madison Square Garden for the twenty-sixth annual United Jewish Appeal benefit, that the "heroic period of struggle and anguish," had been, paradoxically, the "easy" period.

"There was a latent readiness for sacrifice then," he said, "while today, we are facing a harder test, for it is less dramatic. We are still engaged in a struggle vital to our existence. We are building up, stone by stone, house by house, farm by farm, and factory by factory." Mr. Lourie cited three main goals for Israel's period of consolidation: "We must conquer the desert wilderness, integrate our populations, and make peace with our neighbors," he said.

JDC Reports Education Gains In W. Europe

A revival of Jewish education is gaining momentum in Western Europe, according to a stocktaking report issued by the education department of the Joint Distribution Committee. Stanley Abramovitch, JDC educational consultant, who compiled the report, said that the survey revealed a 25 percent increase in enrollment in Jewish day and supplementary schools in the last three years. "And if personnel and facilities were available, the increase would be much larger. As it is, all kinds of quarters are being pressed into emergency service as classrooms, from family kitchens to community centers," he said. Funds for this program, as well as other JDC activities overseas, are provided by the United Jewish Appeal.

Mr. Abramovitch attributed the increase to the fact that "Jewish communities now realize they must take primary responsibility for the reconstruction of Jewish cultural life in Europe. The complacency that used to afflict the prosperous Westernized Jewish communities is no longer possible," he said. "The small size of our present communities imposes a greater responsibility on each individual member and also demands a greater cooperative effort. If it be true that history is a race between education and catastrophe, then the current history of the Jews in Europe is a race between education for survival and disappearance as a people. It has been necessary to start from the beginning in France, Italy, Holland, Sweden, every free country where Jews live today, to train new rabbinical leaders and revitalize the schools. This is being done with the help of technical assistance and funds from the JDC and the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany (Claims Conference)."

Questionnaires were sent last summer to 30 day schools and to kindergartens and supplementary schools serving 120 communities in 14 countries of Western Continental Europe, with a total Jewish population estimated at 532,000. The survey revealed that day school enrollment grew from 4,181 pupils in 1956 to 5,199 pupils in 1959, an increase of 25 percent. Similar increases were reported in kindergarten and supplementary school attendance. The increase was explained in part by improved school facilities. The Jewish school in Rome has been rebuilt; the school at Strasbourg relocated in new premises; the Paris and Antwerp schools have added new wings. Milan is beginning to build a new school for 1,000 pupils, a large new school will open in Athens in the fall, and both Brussels and Stockholm are planning new school buildings.

Numerous supplementary schools have been opened in the last three or four years, many of them in the 60 new Jewish community centers. Thirty-four of these now have new classroom facilities, but some still use makeshift quarters unsuitable for classroom work.

child psychiatry division of the department of psychiatry there.

Dr. Shaw said they needed acceptable volunteers who could spend more than just an hour or two a few days a week, "and these are hard to find," reports the New York Times. He explained that this sort of volunteer would be necessary particularly in such cases as was reported in the journal where the infant must be hospitalized by itself.

The physicians who took part in the study were Dr. Myron L. Stein, now at the Child Development Center and the Jewish Board of Guardians; Dr. Aaron B. Rausen, who is now on a research fellowship at the Harvard University Medical School; and Dr. Blau.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which has the distinction of being a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

There's A Golden Age Club In The Negev

A Golden Age Club has been set up in the new immigrant town of Sderoth, Israel, in the northern Negev. What seemed an almost insoluble problem has been solved. Some time ago the local council of Sderoth asked Malben, the Joint Distribution Committee welfare program in Israel for handicapped new immigrants, for help. The problem: the 156 destitute aged in their community. Malben-JDC immediately sent an expert on community affairs from its department for the care of the aged to organize a survey that would determine the needs of these senior citizens. With a team of Sderoth citizens, the village teacher, postmaster, a labor exchange official and two housewives, he went from door to door, questionnaire in hand, inquiring into the health, social status, education, family, profession, and interests of the population.

What came to light was the following: Though most of the 8,800 North African newcomers in the new village lived in fairly good permanent housing, scores of aged, with no family to move in with, remained alone in their original tin huts. Others were living with children or relatives under overcrowded conditions which made for tension and unhappiness. The survey showed that these aged men and women had no more than $5 to $20 a month on which to live; what was just as bad was that the majority had nothing whatever to do with their time.

The Sderoth Council acted quickly on the results of the survey. The Golden Age Club was set up under Malben-JDC guidance, and with a small cash grant from the agency. Most of the town's aged, healthy and infirm alike, both those living alone and those with large families, became enthusiastic members at once. At the Club they spend part of the day making simple handicraft articles, which earn them much needed pocket money. They get a free, light lunch of cheese, milk, and bread. Elementary lessons in everyday Hebrew through songs and pictures are given twice weekly. It is a congenial and constructive atmosphere, a good beginning.

What was an almost insolvable problem for the small community of Sderoth, has become another example of how Malben-JDC is helping Israel's communities help themselves. Funds for Malben, as well as other aspects of JDC's overseas relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programs are provided by the United Jewish Appeal.

Purim, Feast Of Lots, Begins At Sundown, March 12

Purim, the Feast of Lots, one of the two most joyous of Jewish festivals, begins this year at sunset, Saturday, March 12. The holiday commemorates an episode in ancient Persia when the Jewish people narrowly escaped massacre at the hands of a despot, Haman. His plot to purge the Jews was foiled by the courageous intervention of Queen Esther, the Jewish wife of King Ahasuerus, and her foster-father, Mordecai.

The story of Purim is related in the Book of Esther, one of the most widely known books in the Bible. The word Purim means "lots," and the Bible recounts how lots were cast daily before Haman so that he could fix a day for the slaughter. The name "Haman" has forever been identified in Jewish history, and, indeed, in the literature of Western civilization, with cruel oppressors, evil despots, and dictatorships. Mordecai's refusal to prostrate himself before Haman is regarded as the symbol of free men's determination to defy tyrants.

Purim is a jubilant holiday, marked in the synagogue by songs, prayers of thanksgiving, and by the reading of the Book of Esther from a special scroll or "megillah". Children who flock to synagogues for the reading are invited to wave noise-makers and stamp their feet to drown out the dread name of "Haman", whenever it occurs in the text. Purim pageants, plays, masquerades, and balls underscore the joyful spirit of the holiday. Other important features of the celebration include the exchange of gifts, gifts to the poor, and festive dinners in Jewish homes.

Universal Purim themes at synagogue services are the need to combat bigotry, especially in recent manifestations such as the desecration of houses of worship. Purim ritual in the Union Prayerbook used in Reform congregations throughout the land reads: "Strengthen us to combat prejudice, injustice, and oppression when they strike not only against us but men of whatever race or belief. May we strive unceasingly for the triumph of truth and right over falsehood and wrong. Thus shall we be united in a true covenant of brotherhood and peace. Amen."

The only other holiday which rivals the merry-making mood of Purim in the Jewish calendar is Simchath Torah, occurring after the High Holy Days each fall. This holiday, meaning "Rejoicing in the Torah", marks the completion of the yearly cycle of readings of the Torah (the Five Books of Moses) in the synagogue, and the beginning of the new annual cycle.

The Cultural Predicament Of Soviet Jewry

BY DR. JOSEPH B. SCHECHTMAN

The Jews of Soviet Russia, as the world has come to learn, are the special victims of a government campaign of cultural repression. Educational and cultural facilities, such as are granted to other nationalities, are not made available to the Jews, although, technically, the Soviet constitution recognizes them as a national entity, on a level with all other ethnic groups. There are no schools with Yiddish as the language of instruction. With the exception of a single, miserable sheet in Birobidjan, there is no Jewish periodical in the whole of the Soviet Union. Yiddish theaters have been shut down and there are no Yiddish or Hebrew books being published.

How do the Soviet Jews themselves feel about this state of affairs? In contrast to the evidence of most foreign visitors, to the effect that Soviet Jews are acutely sensitive to the absence of Yiddish schools and press, many of those to whom I talked during my recent Russian visit were either indifferent or even antagonistic to the notion of resurrecting the Yiddish school network or the Yiddish press.

My first discussion on this topic was with a group of board members of the Leningrad Choral Synagogue. In reply to my question as to why there are no Yiddish schools in Soviet Russia, I was told that, according to Soviet law, every group of ten parents of school children over 16 years of age is entitled to request that education in their mother tongue be given to their children; there was no such demand by Jewish parents. "Have you ever submitted such a request on behalf of your children?" I asked. The answer was, "No." When I pressed for further explanation, they just shrugged their shoulders.

One of the board members later accompanied me to the gate of the synagogue, and I said to him: "You are a member of a group which is responsible for the synagogue to the state authorities. This must surely mean that you are concerned with all things Jewish. How is it then that you did not use your constitutional rights to ask for your children's Yiddish education?"

His reply was unexpectedly frank: "In Stalin's time I was, like everybody else, too afraid to ask for anything, and now I am not sure that I care enough to venture such a demand. I am even less sure that my children would care to send their children to a Yiddish school. There has been no Jewish education for twenty years and my married sons and daughters have become thoroughly Russified. However, there are still some parents who are eager to convey some elements of Jewishness to their children and these have arranged for private instruction in Hebrew and Bible, but not Yiddish."

I had an even franker, certainly more elaborate discussion on the same subject with a highly intelligent, well-informed and articulate artist in his late forties, who, attracted by the El Al zipper bag that I carried everywhere on my Russian travels, stopped me in Herzen Street in Leningrad. We had three long conversations during the two days at our disposal, and while I am not prepared to endorse the "unorthodox" views he advanced, I find them of sufficient interest to reproduce his remarks as fully as I can.

Once the initial amenities were satisfied, I opened our discussion of Soviet Jewish attitudes as follows: "In May 1956, your Premier Nikita Khrushchev told a French Socialist delegation that as far as Jews are concerned, even if Yiddish schools were established, very few would attend them voluntarily. If Jews were to be compelled to attend such schools, there would certainly be a revolt, he said, for they would consider this as some kind of ghetto. What do you think of his statement?"

"I hear it for the first time," he replied. "Such statements have not been published in the Soviet press. But, however strongly I resent the necessity of agreeing with anything that emanates from 'my premier,' as you choose to call him, I can't help saying that he is absolutely right. There is no need and no demand for Yiddish schools. It is of course true that in 1931-3 there were some 130,000 pupils in Yiddish primary and secondary schools in the whole of the USSR (55 percent of all Jewish school children in White Russia, 49 percent in the Ukraine, and 8 percent in the rest of the Soviet Union). But it is also common knowledge that at least in the first years this high percentage of enrollment was due not to the free choice of the parents, but to pressure by the Yevsektzia. And in 1935, the Yevsektzia itself changed its tune. I remember the Yiddish newspaper Emes arguing that there is nothing sacrosanct about sending Jewish children to Yiddish schools: if a child knows Russian or Ukrainian better than Yiddish or lives in a Russian or Ukrainian milieu, there is nothing wrong in his attending a Russian or Ukrainian school.

"Urbanization (by 1939 more than 87 percent of all Jews lived in urban centers) and the drift from the Ukraine and White Russia to other parts of the USSR also weakened the attraction of the Yiddish schools. Their natural decline started in 1937 and for all practical purposes was almost complete by 1940. Even at that time hardly anybody mourned their disappearance. There was little that could be called Jewish in these schools. No Hebrew was taught; the Sabbath was never observed; all that was left of the thousands of years of Jewish history was the so-called 'class struggle of the Jewish working masses against their bourgeois oppressors.' Violent and vulgar anti-religious propaganda was flourishing. The German invasion only hastened the final extinction of the Yiddish school system, and it was never revived.

"An entire generation has grown up without the slightest notion of the Yiddish language. How can you expect this generation to want Yiddish as the medium of their children's education? I myself am divorced and childless, but none of my four sisters and brothers, who do have children, and none of my relatives and acquaintances, however Jewish their consciousness, would even dream of doing such a thing to their children. Of course, this 'lost generation' — lost for Yiddish, I mean — is largely the product of the government policy of closing Yiddish schools and suppressing Yiddish culture. I can well understand the indignation this policy has aroused. But indignation, however righteous, does not change the facts of life and is unable to turn back history."

"And what about the Yiddish press?" I asked. As far as I have been able to determine there are 7,537 dailies and 2,500 other periodicals in sixty languages published in the Soviet Union. "Why isn't there a single publication in Yiddish?"

"You make me laugh!" was his abrupt retort. "Do you know that in 1939, when there were still seven government-subsidized Yiddish papers, their total circulation was only 38,700? I have no doubt whatever that today the number of Jews who would support a Yiddish paper is even fewer. Who would now care to read a revived Emes or Shtern?"

"And still," I persisted, "I was told that the Warsaw Communist
